A Labor of a Day

Labor Day, as many aspects of United States Law do, began at a local level, spread to the state level, and after a long struggle, was finally accepted at the federal level as a national holiday. The first Labor Day was held in New York City on Tuesday, September 5, 1882. The holiday was conceived of as a "general holiday for the laboring classes” to honor those “who from rude nature have delved and carved all the grandeur we behold .”
